

Some pics from the NWS game at Salute on Saturday 13th November (courtesy of Robert Hutton).

We decided to do something a bit different this year and ran a cut down version of Saga at Sea as a participation game in 28mm, on the grounds that if it floats and it fights then it's Naval. The game was very popular and we were running games pretty much from when the gates opened right up until just before they closed, which was great but we didn't really get to see very much of the rest of the show. There are some great show reports out there though so you can catch up with what other games were presented elsewhere in the hall from there.

We had all ages of participants playing from lads and dads/moms (mostly in the morning) to whole parties of up to six seasoned gamers. The game seemed to go down well and kept players engaged. If we were successful in planting the seed of an idea that not all dark age battles took place on land I'm taking that as a win

Next year – Midway!

PS you can see Rob's interview during the show with Gerry from OTT by following the link below:

<https://www.beastsofwar.com/liveblogentry/saga-at-sea-from-the-naval-wargames-society/#entry>

Cheers

Simon Stokes simonjohnstokes@aol.com

See photos below.

